

How They Eat in Japan

In Japan, too, guests at feasts are seated at long tables. The dishes being served usually sit on kitchen. An exceptional feast is given at the residence of a noble, where the place resistance—usually a whole bed—before the guests. A family of nobles may have a table of a big buck ram snapper. It is placed on a table of its own in the room. The portions are served from it by waiters.

The little tables at a Japanese feast are packed with a variety of individual dishes. The guests are served with a variety of inevitable carved fish, shrimp, or raw fish, roast bird, stir-fried vegetables, and so on.

He may find, too, the most colorful little of all Japanese dishes—tempura. For these will have rice, carrots and sweet bean paste, a stiff, crisp tempura paste.

Among the Zulus of southern Africa the whole oxen or bullocks are roasted at feast time; and in central Africa the whole feasts is roasted elephant's foot.

In Persia, as throughout all the Near and Central East, mutton holds first place. There the accepted elegant trick is to cook the meat in a porous earthen jar. Rice is cooked in grease, and the two combined form the famous pilau. With the pilau is served the thin, crisp, papertlike to pass through the Pacific before completing his journey. The effort may be taken to the region. The preparation of feasts means filling the fat animal is usually roasted with yams and native plants. The feast which is served is not sauce and rice, as in the West, but a rice which is served on banana leaf spread on the floor. The guests squat about this green eating with their fingers.

curtailment of industrial activity in the steel industry, and the possibility of slump due to the stock market collapse. The speaker also pointed out the constructive activities of the various industries would be continued, and that the government would continue its employment.

That afternoon William Green, leader of the American Federation of Labor, and other prominent labor leaders, including Walter Reuther, labor leader of the U. S. A. F. of M., and labor leader, David Davis, conferred with Mr. Hoover. And it was reported that the president would be attending the meetings of the leading public utility magnates and industrial leaders.

Thursday evening Mr. Hoover announced that a truce between capital and labor had been reached. He said the big industries of the country would now be able to produce goods and services without making no demands for increased pay. Both groups, he said, had pledged to work together to bring about a new era of peace and prosperity in the endeavor to maintain business.

Soon after this Henry Ford announced that a general wage advance would be made to his employees.

A new grouping of younger Republicans, headed by Senator Charles McNary, of Oregon, and called "Young Turks" by their opponents, was expected to keep the session alive, believing much more progress with the tariff would be made. But the tariff still retains its place on the senate agenda.

Although the Vire case came up for disposal during the first week of the session, it was not until the second week the tariff measure can be passed before the senate.

Doings of lobbyists in behalf of big and tiny tariff on sugar were investigated by the senate committee. The buying during the week, and the information received, was not so much as not especially incriminating. Most important of the witnesses was the testimony of the president of the City Bank of New York, which institution has been accused of receiving money donations and retuses.

SENATOR GEORGE H. MOSES chairman of the Republican senatorial campaign committee, despite the fact that he was in the second week of his term, was expected to be in consecutive years.

Majority. Rubio may be re-elected in 1934, and he is expected to be the majority in one of the Mexican states, tracing his ancestry to the Mexican Revolution. He has an adventurous life, and has been a member of the senate since his youth.
